This is a preliminary document. We invite reader feedback, which can be sent to ncchpp@inspq.qc.ca
During the first six months of 2009, three Canadian provinces announced anti-poverty policies: the Government of Ontario passed poverty reduction legislation, while Manitoba and Nova Scotia each launched comprehensive strategies. New Brunswick is currently (as of August 2009) in the midst of formulating its own strategy. These provinces join Quebec, and Newfoundland and Labrador in their efforts to combat poverty through broad-based policies.

In light of these recent developments, and in continuity with other work developed on anti-poverty strategies across Canada, the National Collaborating Centre for Healthy Public Policy (NCCHPP) has conducted a scan of comprehensive laws and strategies. This refers to legislation, plans or strategies “that are multi-faceted, crossing program areas and jurisdictions”. This scan seeks to provide a descriptive overview of existing comprehensive anti-poverty policies, and to guide the reader towards these policy documents and analyses of them. It also aims to provoke discussion concerning current and future policy responses to poverty.

This document does not replace an in-depth analysis of anti-poverty measures in Canada. Indeed, it does not examine the individual policies that contribute to the social safety net provided (or not) by each province. Rather, it focuses on comprehensive policies, as these usually involve the use of intersectoral approaches, one area of study at the NCCHPP. Furthermore, most of the anti-poverty strategies described in the scan are recent and not yet well known by the public health community. Since other provinces are in the midst of formulating their own strategies, and the federal government has yet to establish its own broad-based policy, it is important to be familiar with existing strategies and the mechanisms they use to fight poverty.

Table 1 highlights anti-poverty legislation that has been adopted in two Canadian provinces: Quebec and Ontario. This legislation is of interest as it promotes long-term action and government accountability.

Table 2 describes comprehensive poverty reduction strategies and action plans that have been launched by the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, as well as Newfoundland and Labrador, Nova Scotia and Manitoba. It highlights the strategies’ objectives, targets and mechanisms, as well as key areas they target: housing; early childhood development initiatives and family policies; training and employment programs; income supplementation and replacement; and place-based initiatives, among others. This information contributes to a summary understanding of the concrete measures that provinces take to reduce poverty, within comprehensive policies.

This NCCHPP tool is open for your comments:

- Are there modifications that need to be made to a particular entry?
- Are there missing strategies?
- Should other dimensions be added to the descriptive framework?
- Is this tool useful?

<td>- Ontario’s power is its people - We all suffer from poverty; it leaves too much untapped potential on the sidelines - The best way to combat poverty is to break the intergenerational cycle that makes poverty such an insidious problem - Moral imperative; economic imperative - In a global economy, we must</td>
<td>- Poverty is the most significant barrier to the healthy development of children and negatively affects all those who experience it - Has a detrimental effect on the social and economic well-being of communities - People affected are not able to develop their full potential - The more people there are living in poverty, the greater the impact - Vision of a province where poverty</td>
<td>- Nova Scotia’s greatest resource is its people - Some individuals and families struggle at certain times or throughout their lives - The more we assist the population in their time of need, the stronger our economy and our society - Opportunity = prosperity; preventing poverty promotes prosperity</td>
<td>- We understand that poverty is about more than money alone. - Poverty is complex and requires long-term solutions that get at root causes. - We must focus on building policies and programs based on evidence and invest in what works. - We recognize that people face unique challenges related to gender, race, culture and ability.</td>

- Makes prevention the priority
- Draws upon participatory citizenship
- Emphasizes local responsibility for community development
- Seeks to reconcile economic, social, cultural, and environmental development
- Focus on providing support to the disadvantaged and excluded, through empowerment and the solidarity of all citizens in order to support them in their efforts
- Importance of fostering social cohesion: shared values, lower income disparities, greater equality of access to knowledge, health, housing, and participation
- Poverty is expensive
- Poverty affects health and welfare
- Poverty causes income-related health inequalities
- Human capital is the foundation of economic progress- Refusing to take action can limit our ability to compete.

Mechanisms to ensure implementation of strategy

Cabinet-level committee

A cabinet-level committee will be responsible for overseeing the implementation of decisions, annual reporting on progress, and ongoing consultations with key stakeholders. This committee will be responsible for implementing the strategy, supported by a secretariat. The team will be responsible for overseeing the implementation of decisions, annual reporting on progress, and ongoing consultations with key stakeholders. Strategy calls upon engagement of federal and municipal governments.

Social Policy Institute

- Independent institute with the following activities:
  - Evaluating social policy, including economic evaluation;
  - Identifying best practices in other jurisdictions for use in Ontario;
  - Working with international organizations.

A Ministerial Committee

A Ministerial Committee will be formed to guide and direct the strategy implementation. The committee will comprise the same ministers involved in the provinces Social Prosperity Framework from the following departments: Community Services, Economic and Rural Development, Education, Finance, Health, Training and Labour Force Development and Treasury and Policy Board. The committee will be supported by a group of senior officials made up of the deputy ministers of the departments involved.

Coordinator of Poverty

An interdepartmental group will monitor the application of the Strategy; this group will report to the Ministers’ Poverty Reduction and Social Inclusion Committee. The group will support cross-government activities.
experts to develop innovation roadmaps in specific areas of competitive strength, social policy and economic importance and Rural Development and the Minister Responsible for the Rural Secretariat
This committee will be supported by a Deputy Ministers’ Committee and an Interdepartmental Working Group.

Reduction: acts on the direction of the Committee, meets with ministers to review progress, support evidence-based policy and program development.

2 Katherine Scott (personal communication, June 4, 2009)
3 In order to identify the provinces that have adopted comprehensive legislation and/or strategies, we conducted a survey of government websites, using keywords “[anti]-poverty strategy/legislation”, “poverty reduction”, and “provincial poverty strategy/legislation”. We also used the following search engines: Eureka, Ingenta, Santécom, EBSCOhost, CSA, and Google. The Canadian Council on Social Development reports (see bibliography) were particularly helpful in identifying comprehensive strategies.
4 Intersectoral approaches “strive to integrate the actions of other sectors around the same problem” (Gagnon and Kouri 2008, p.3); in this case, the problem of poverty.
6 Torjman (2008) suggests that these are key elements, among others, of robust poverty strategies.
7 The descriptive framework is not based on a particular conceptual model. Rather, it includes categories that come from some or all of the laws and strategy documents (i.e. “guiding values”; “objective”; “target”; “monitoring mechanisms”; “measures used”), and that contribute to a summary understanding of each comprehensive law or strategy. The category “definition of poverty”, also explicit in most policy documents, is included because it is an indication of how each government frames the problem of poverty. The presence of a “Government-led consultation process” indicates to what extent the Government has sought input from the population and from those living in poverty, making the policy-making process participative and inclusive. “Creation of interministerial/intersectoral committee” and “Implementation mechanisms” demonstrate to what extent the law/strategy mobilizes decision makers from other Government sectors, as well as actors from outside of Government, and indicates how the law/strategy has or will be applied. The category “Mechanisms to ensure government coherence” gives an idea of the extent to which laws/strategies may involve the participation and cooperation of other sectors of Government, and the application of a “whole-of-government approach”. (See Kouri and Gagnon, “Whole-of-Government Approaches: Two Canadian Examples”. Presentation given at the Conference of the International Union of Health
Promotion and Education (IUHPE), Vancouver, June 12, 2007 [http://www.ncchpp.ca/docs/IUHPE%20Vancouver%20June%202007.pdf]. The category “Areas of intervention” has been explained above (see page 2). We welcome comments about this descriptive framework.

As of February 25, 2009.
