

determine the conditions for implementing such action. Specifically, this document describes how the establishment of partnerships between Vancouver Coastal Health (a regional health authority) and PHS Community Services Society (an NFP organization delivering "low-threshold services" in Vancouver's Downtown Eastside) made it possible to reach people living with mental illness or substance abuse problems, while at the same time acting on the social and public policy context that, in part, determined their health status.

Morrison, V. (2011). Framing the core: Health inequalities and poverty in Saskatoon's low-income neighbourhoods. Montréal, Québec: National Collaborating Centre for Healthy Public Policy. Available online at: http://www.ncchpp.ca/162/Publications.ccnpps?id_article=622

This document presents a description of the five key frames used respectively by Quint Development Corporation and the Saskatoon Health Region in discussions of the communities, particularly the city's lowest income neighbourhoods, they serve. These frames orient their definitions of the populations they serve, the key problems and their determinants as they see them as well as the main approaches to resolving them. This document proposes that an awareness of the "frames" used by not-for-profits and public health actors can contribute to more successful partnerships to tackle issues of common interest.

The National Collaborating Centre for Healthy Public Policy (NCCHPP) seeks to increase the expertise of public health actors across Canada in healthy public policy through the development, sharing and use of knowledge.

The NCCHPP is one of six centres financed by the Public Health Agency of Canada. The six centres form a network across Canada, each hosted by a different institution and each focusing on a specific topic linked to public health. In addition to the Centres' individual contributions, the network of Collaborating Centres provides focal points for the exchange and common production of knowledge relating to these topics. The National Collaborating Centre for Healthy Public Policy is hosted by the Institut national de santé publique du Québec (INSPQ), a leading centre in public health in Canada.
